3 tips from us

Getting ready for competition?

PREMATURE COMPETITION

Every serious golfer knows that this game is about time, practice and patience. Currently a lot of young eager golfers make the mistake of getting into competition too early without having the skill to back them up. This can be detrimental to their game as a bad performance hurts the child's confidence and then it's an uphill battle from there.

GETTING COMPETITION READY

To all the advanced juniors and aspiring amateurs out there, make a strategy to get competition Ready! This starts off not a few weeks before a tournament but months before. Start with making an improvement plan based on data that you've collected from previously played tournaments and day to day practice. Because it will boil down to what you've been doing in the long run, not just in golf but overall lifestyle.

CHOOSE A MENTOR OVER AN INSTRUCTOR

As you come closer to an event there are a few sure-fire things that will help you peak:

1. Study the course conditions and layout beforehand by playing a practice round or using google maps. Now use this information to strategize what shots to hit where and practice them before hand on the range.
2. Clean up the basics: Practice putts inside 6ft and Lag putts for 3 putt avoidance, know your distances for all clubs, make a course map and a written course strategy.
3. Prioritize mental routines and body language as you visualize the event when hitting shots on the range. This will help handle pressure in the actual event.

"I've always tried to block out the pressure and think of the bigger picture. When you're behind the blocks, it's not just about the race. It's about trying to beat what you did before"-
Michael Phelps

"My strategy is to be more prepared than anyone else. That means training harder, staying focused and being mentally strong."-Rafael Nadal.

1 question for you

How do you view success in competition? Do you view it event by event or is it something long term?
